6. PERSONAL CONFLICTS

6.1. The possibility that an employee's actions or decisions may be affected due to an actual or potential divergence between or among the interests of the Company, the Company's clients and/or the employee's own personal interests is a common factor to many conflict of interest situations. The Company tries to set out examples of areas in which an employee may encounter a conflict of interest and details of the Company's policies in relation to each.

a) External Business Interests: Employees should avoid other employment or business activities, including personal investment that interfere with their duties to the Company, divide their loyalty or create or appear to create a conflict of interest. Each employee should promptly report any situation or transaction involving an actual or potential conflict of interest to the Compliance Officer who in turn shall report to the Board of Directors. Following determination whether a conflict exists or is harmful, the employee should terminate all such external business interests unless approval to continue by the Compliance Officer is provided.

b) Interests in competitors, members or suppliers: Except with the prior written approval of the Compliance Officer, no employee or member of his/her immediate family shall serve as an employee, officer, director or trustee of, or have any substantial interest in or business relationship with, a competitor, member, or supplier of the Company that could create a divided loyalty, or the appearance of one. Immediate family members means (a) any spouse, children, parents or siblings or (b) any relative to whose support the employee contributes either directly or indirectly and who shares the employee's household.

c) Receipt of Gifts and/or Inducements: No employee or member of his/her immediate family shall solicit or accept from anyone that does business or competes with the Company any compensation, gift of cash (or equivalent), significant gift, loan, lavish entertainment (including, but not limited to, meals, sports events, and concert and theatre events), inducement including a fee commission or any other substantial non-monetary benefit. Upon receipt of a gift or inducement from a third party, all employees must report this immediately to the Responsible officer who shall keep a log registering such gifts and/or inducements. Any gifts that are received must be promptly delivered to the Responsible officer. The Responsible officer will, in his or her discretion, determine whether a gift can or should be kept by the employee or returned to the donor.

d) Interests in Transactions: No employee or a member of his immediate family shall engage in any transaction involving the Company if the employee or member of his immediate family has a substantial interest in the transaction or can benefit directly or indirectly from the transaction (other than through the employee's normal compensation), except as specifically authorised in writing by the Compliance Officer. No employee shall acquire or derive personal gain or profit from any business opportunity or investment that comes to his or her attention as a result of his or her association with the Company and in which he or she knows the Company might reasonably be expected to participate or have an interest, without first disclosing in writing all relevant facts to the Company, offering the opportunity to the Company and receiving specific written authorisation from the Compliance Officer. All directors and employees are required to notify the Compliance Officer of any outside business interests.

7.6. Front-running: Front-running is the purchase or sale of a security in advance of an order in the same or a related security in anticipation of a benefit. Knowledge of such orders could be considered possession of material non-public information. Thus front-running not only violates regulatory restrictions, but also has the potential of violating laws relating to insider trading. The trader' direct supervisor will review all personal accounts of traders for front-running.

Employees are prohibited from entering into personal transactions, or counseling or procuring others to do so, where it involves the misuse of inside or client confidential information or if it conflicts, or is likely to conflict, with an obligation of the Company to a customer. This restriction extends to disclosing information, except as required in the normal course of business, where employees know, or reasonably ought to know, that as a result of the disclosure the person, to whom the disclosure has been made, will enter into a transaction, within the scope of this policy, or counsel or procure another person to do so. The Company is required to ensure that employees covered under the scope of this policy are made aware of the restrictions on personal transactions and the measures that the Company has established in connection with personal transactions and disclosure.

In particular, the arrangements under this policy are designed to ensure that the Company is informed promptly of any personal transactions entered into by an employee and that a record is kept of the personal transaction notified to the Company, including any authorization or prohibition in connection with the transaction.

7.9. Employee Permission to Deal: An Employee restricted by the Conflicts of Interest Policy or the Personal Transactions Policy of the Company, including their immediate family members, must request, in writing, or by email, to the Compliance Officer and their direct supervisor, permission to effect a personal transaction. An Employee, including their immediate family members may not effect a personal transaction until express permission from the Compliance Officer has been confirmed in writing. Should the Compliance Officer's permission be granted, then that permission is valid until the end of seven calendar days from when it was requested unless subsequently notified. The Employee should ensure that after a transaction has been executed in accordance with the permission granted a copy confirmation is sent to the Compliance Officer. Should Compliance Officer permission not be granted to effect a personal transaction, the Employee or their immediate family may not effect that personal transaction.
